Dear Hiring Committee,

I am pleased to recommend Adi Rosenstock, whom I managed during his internship on the Company Financials Consumer team at Bloomberg L.P. Adi was one of the strongest interns I have ever seen. He stood out for his technical ability, understanding of financial data, initiative, and the positive energy he brought to the team.

Adi was originally assigned one data quality project involving Bloomberg Intelligence and Company Financials. He completed the work ahead of schedule and went on to take ownership of two additional projects. He built pipelines to identify missing and conflicting values across company filings, developed methods to validate discrepancies using SEC filings, and developed a full agentic solution that determined which values were correct. He also completed a reconciliation project for the Bloomberg Indices team that separated expected data differences from potential processing issues, helping the team focus its efforts where they mattered most.

Adi has the skills of a strong software and data engineer as well as an impressive expertise in financial markets and company financials. He writes clear code, works effectively with large datasets, and can turn an open ended problem into a practical and maintainable solution. He also leverages artificial intelligence thoughtfully, building internal tools to support the investigation of financial data issues while keeping appropriate controls and subject matter review in place.

Just as important, Adi was an excellent teammate. He brought enthusiasm and curiosity to his work, and his energy had a positive influence on those around him. He participated actively in discussions, shared what he learned, and was always willing to help others solve a problem. He worked greatly with the engineering department, Bloomberg Intelligence, data platform, and support teams, and communicated clearly with both technical and business stakeholders.

Adi fits naturally into Bloomberg's culture. He took ownership of his work, held himself to a high standard, and consistently looked for ways to improve the team. Although he joined us as an intern, he quickly became someone colleagues trusted and enjoyed working with.

Adi completed three meaningful projects during an internship originally scoped for one. He combines technical skill, financial judgment, teamwork, and a strong work ethic. I am confident that he will make a valuable contribution wherever he goes, and I would be very happy to work with him again.

I give Adi my strongest recommendation. Feel free to contact me at csissoko2@bloomberg.net with any additional questions.

Sincerely,

Cheick Sissoko
